

Kezia Catherine U. Kong

I have always felt strongly about Ateneo. Most of the time, it's hate because of the superficialities, system, and workload. But during the rest of the time, it's love because of the friendships I have formed and the lessons I have learned. Nevertheless, my time spent in Ateneo will always be a significant part of my life.

The most painful memories are remembered most fondly—this is a lesson I've learned to keep close to my heart as I consider my time in this institution as the most difficult experience I have ever encountered in my life. Aside from external factors, the constant pushing didn't always sit well with me as it would be way beyond my comfort zone most of the time. However, I am still grateful for the challenges I've faced as I've learned from the success or failure, and I am who I am because of these.
