

John Benedict N. Du

Two eggs. One is trained and the other is created. Both have life but only trained egg can learn. The created egg is only made to be cooked for a meal. If it survives, it rolls away and the trained egg goes around cooking another egg. Throwing an egg at another yields a minimum of two cracks. The inner floor eats the egg's age at a tenth of a day. The middle floor swallows the yoke and the force while splitting the shell. Finally, the outer floor splits the half of the spaces in between.

Joseph Vincent B. Lugnasin

"Happiness is not something you postpone for the future; it is something you design for the present." (Jim Rohn)