

Patricia Mae C. Magallanes

MINOR IN PHILOSOPHY

Mistakes. I know I made a lot of those in my four-year stay, and it is very difficult to face them, acknowledge them, and to accept them. It puts you in a slump and makes you anxious. It severely demotivates you.

The easy way out is to blame everything and everyone else but yourself.

But that's not the way to go. You have to own it. Then get past it. Then make new mistakes because mistakes are a part of our lives.

How else can we learn but through trial and error?

So move on. Try again.

Jose Anton Vernelli Y. Magno

Most people hear Magno before they see him. Whether it's screaming from the top of his lungs in Gonzaga, or giving it his all during OrSem, he can be heard from miles away. This is a testament to one of his greatest qualities: being passionate. He gives his all in everything he does, big or small. He is driven, intelligent, and most of all, compassionate and directed towards being a man for and with others. He is a person with a loud voice and an even louder passion for others. (M. Pascual)