"Are you still alive?" It's a question I've asked and been asked loads of times. A question asked lightly but its true weight is understood by everyone. It's a means of solidarity, an encouraging pat on the back despite the morbid words. Something that kept me going in the face of acads and org work because it made me want to reply in affirmation that I am a survivor, I won't give up. And I'm proud to say that yes, I'm still alive. And I thank Ateneo and the people in it for seeing me through.
