“Most would know Bea as the English-speaking girl who always expresses her thoughts with wide eyes and high happy emotions as she could. Bea may appear to be willed when she voices out her opinions, but this just means she wants the best expectations to be delivered. Of all her traits, Bea’s affable cheer (calling your name) at any time of the day will make you feel valuable as a person.” (D. Palafox)

It is essential for our well-being to find solitude. Not to be mistaken as idleness or aloofness, but a moment for us to examine ourselves, determine what values we uphold, and give importance to the world surrounding us. Be thankful for another day, appreciate life in all its splendor, and make no excuses. For it is easier to be lost in the transiency of time, thinking we have lived our life, than it is to find ourselves in what we truly love.
