I think that the best moments I've had in the Ateneo were the ones which I've shared with the people I've met during my stay. To my professors, thank you for the wisdom you've given me since day one. To my friends, I'm really thankful for each and every one of you, and I love you all so much. To my blockmates, Physics wasn't easy, but it surely was a lot of fun with you guys around. Lastly, to the Ateneo, thank you for being my second home and for giving me the most meaningful years of my life.

MINOR IN APPLIED PHYSICS

I often found myself pulling away from a desk full of homework to take a walk around the campus. It was nothing short of comfort to look up at the stars for some peace of mind, for a reminder of why I chose to be a physicist, and less practically, for answers to Chapter 12 of Griffiths. Yet, it was this same place that taught me how to gladly surrender a sky-bound stupor in service of making every step of the way count, while discovering what it truly means to mean a lot to people.
