The past four years at the Ateneo have pushed me to my limits, challenged my way of thinking, and continuously surprised me. More than anything, I was taught of the value of kindness and the dimensions of faith. I was taught that the truly great teachers are not defined by their credentials but by the care and devotion they show their students. I have learned and experienced things I never would have otherwise, and I am grateful for every opportunity and every person I have met along the way.

Make a lot of mistakes and learn from it. Don't make stupid decisions, though, because that's just stupid.
