On my first day of college, I got lost as I was going to my very first class. In my panic, I had to stop walking to stare at the campus map that I couldn't understand. Years after that day, I honestly still get lost, and I still go to the wrong classrooms all the time. Now, I'm lucky because I no longer need a campus map to find my way around. I've found amazing people who help me navigate through the sprawling landscape of life and who urge me on when I'm thinking of stopping.

Upon starting my college life, I thought that I will have to face challenges on my own. I thought that it was the challenge that college wanted. However, along the way, teachers, family, relatives, and, most especially, friends came in the picture. When I felt down, they brought me back up. They were there for me in both the good times and bad times. Through thick and thin, they were there. I am lucky to have this second family—the Ateneo family.
