Taking roads through the open doors; Ateneo will at one point be a challenge but more than anything, Ateneo is an opportunity. The journey it took from nervous college freshman to a somewhat less nervous college senior was tough, but it was one that helped me embrace the truth in carpe diem. Academic requirements and org life, all the little stepping stones that had brought me from one side to the other, made me ready to open these doors and walk right through it successful.

Growth will never coexist with comfort. It is in unceasingly going for the most difficult choices and constantly taking the greatest leaps that one finds the truest of self. The Ateneo taught me that real well. To say that I will never find the right words to encompass how grateful I am for all the learning years I have spent in the Ateneo would be a huge understatement. I may have grown so much as a person, but it is for sure that I will never outgrow the love I have for the Ateneo.
