

John Raphael L. Faustino

Here's to all the worst and best moments in college: from the hell weeks to chill days, from days of sorrow, anger, and hopelessness to moments full of joy and laughter. Here's to the orgs I've been a part of, to all the relationships I've built, and to the people I met along the way; the go-to's, the constants and the ones that got away. It's been one hell of an adventure.
All heart! All out!

I have been in the Ateneo since I was six years old, and during my time, I have learned so much. But ultimately, I am grateful to my alma mater for teaching me of how much I have yet to know. Studying here has humbled me, but also roused in me my potential for the future. As I descend into the world beyond the white and blue, I pray that I may realize the promise I have discovered here, and that I do so working always in loving service for our country and the world.
