In Political Theory, I learned that “thea” means the beginning—a spectacle that is waiting to be understood—while “theorema” means conclusion—the understanding of what was in the beginning. Having a similar name, I have long awaited to call myself a theorema. But in Political Theory and life in general, the end only signifies another start. I will be a theorema when I graduate, but I will be a thea again shortly after. And perhaps that isn’t so bad.

My life in Ateneo has been a journey. That journey brought me to the edges of my comfort zone. On the edge, I encountered fear, and Ateneo helped me get past it. On the other side, I found the person I am and the person I want to become. I go down from the hill, from my dream school, with more than I had ever hoped for. Thank you.
