

Jan Adrian G. Chan

The Ateneo is where terror profs dine with brilliant minds, where your greatest joys reflect your saddest cries, where the rustic grounds meet the starry skies. So if you find your future stuck with no sort of traction, may you be reminded of this most beautiful intersection. Keep your head on the grounds, but throw your eyes to the skies. May your tears bring you beers — you have one brilliant mind. Cheers!

Joshua Jerick R. Chan

Embrace failure. Love the unknown. Don't be afraid to explore every opportunity you can to test your own limits and surpass yourself. If there's one thing my college journey has taught me it's that if you keep moving forward with an openness to learn and to love, all paths will eventually lead to a home. To all the friends who filled that home for the past four years, I cannot thank you enough for tempering my heart and for making the prospect of saying goodbye so painful.