MESSAGE FROM THE DEAN

The life you are about to face as you leave Ateneo is uncertain not because opportunities will be scarce but because opportunities will abound and choices will be difficult. Decisions and answers are not going to be similar to exams where you are either right or wrong. Neither will they be like experiments where you know that you will always have the carefully implemented scientific method to support your findings whether they are good or bad. Oftentimes, your choices will be between good and a different kind of good or between bad and a different kind of bad. Worse even, you may find yourself needing to decide between one uncertainty and another uncertainty. But I suppose this is life. The exam you are given is the lesson itself and no one will give you tips on how to pass.

Still, I trust that what you have learned from us will get you to the right path and the right decision sooner or later. I trust that you will find a path where happiness will be with you throughout your journey and not just at the end. Finally, I hope that you will keep Science in your lives and in your choices. This nation needs scientists like you who are fully capable of doing what is right and what is good. Congratulations and I wish you all the best.

SCIENCE FOR A SHARED WORLD

by Karl Lorenzo S. Estuart

WHAT WE HAVE ALL EXPERIENCED IS HAVING HAD ENOUGH – enough of the sample long tests, the index card reviewers, the rewriting of class notes. We've all heard what they've told us – it's not so much the content of the course than it is the discipline and rigor imbued in us through studying the course that's important. But this never helped anyone get through an overlong textbook or a long overnight group study session in one of the many coffee shops along the Katipunan stretch.

Perhaps we have been buoyed by many other things we've been told – that we were the top 15% of all the ACET passers; that, as STEM majors, we were taking some of the toughest courses in the school, as if courses could even be ranked in such terms; that there was great demand for STEM graduates even though the prevailing conditions in the country still show a lack of institutional support for the sciences. Maybe this was the end of the line for others who went through science high schools and were bound by contract to follow through.

Yet it is precisely this – to follow things through to the end – that is a flagging trait of a SOSE major. We pursue the future that seems carefully plotted out for us: for those entering medicine to take the NMAT and apply for the top medicine schools, for some to enter the competitive field of research and science academics, for others to enter the high-stakes world of finance and business. We hold on to these visions, like flares that sent out their shimmering and radiant light in the darkness, like ferries guiding us across turbulent seas to some other side we've yet to see but hope, beyond all certainty, is there.

The currency, the common denomination, across all SOSE courses is certainty. We concern ourselves with disciplines that revolve around such certainties, axioms, laws, and theories. SOSE develops in us the capacity to accept these as they come, to recall them when they are asked for, and to apply them in unique and realistic ways. Our studying amounts to as much – memorizing the next math theorem, the chemical diagram, the physics formula. But how does a scientist-in-the-making fare against the real world, amorphous, ambiguous, and incessantly resistant to all-encompassing certainties? In other words, how well did we fare during our philosophy and theology orals?

Here I would like to resist such dichotomizations – what we can be certain about and what remains uncertain are not meant to be taken separately. Science was never meant to abstract the world, but to train us to recognize that there will always be more to see in it – how the sky turns blue, how patterns occur throughout nature, how civilizations rise and fall, how the stars may lead us to another Earth, how health and infrastructure in global cities may be improved for all.

In other words, scientists are not exempted from making leaps of faith. SOSE majors aren't bred to take all things as they are, but to recognize underlying properties beneath all things to train them to see more. This is the entire project of academic research, seeking to look beyond what has been seen to uncover more of what is already there. This is the project of the philosophers who aim to articulate to the best of their language the limitless nuances of human experience. We share the same pursuit with all other disciplines. We study precisely because we do not know everything, but we do not believe it ends at a certain point – we voyage into the unknown, from the fringes of outer space to the intricate linings of the human person, where something new awaits us, ready to surprise us and fill us with a renewed sense of wonder.

If the Ateneo has taught us anything besides this, it may be easy to miss. I believe it has been coded in us every step of the way: the awkward group dynamics at OrSem, the first catastrophic block-wide long test failure, the orgs we joined, the aforementioned group study sessions, and the community Google Drives. We are not alone. SOSE is an enduring school. It is a school where successes and failures are shared, where discoveries are made together, and where we learn as the other learns. Built into how we speak to each other is the weight of our courses, what a hassle it all is, and what joy everything else is: being with each other. The Ateneo compels us to seek each other out, to share the light we cast out with them, and to guide each other to where we have to go, through the darkness. As science endeavors to reveal what's there, we need to be constantly reminded of why and what we do all this for, and this is the same as asking why it is we fought to get an org project done despite it being the middle of hell week – there are others counting on us, just as we count on them. One of the questions they ask to those applying for the Ateneo School of Medicine and Public Health is: Why do you want to become a doctor? At some point in our Ateneo education, we realize we do not become doctors just for ourselves: our friends and family have worked to see us achieve this dream, the country is in desperate need of more healthcare professionals, and there will never be a person not in need of what we can give them.

Which is to say: I couldn't have gotten here without all my friends, my blockmates, my professors, and my family. It is our highest calling to recognize that we have been graced with these people and that we owe it to them and to the rest of the world, caught in its own monolithic dark, to cast out all the fatigue, restlessness, anxiety, and disenchantment with which I began this piece, and which befalls us all in our lowest moments as science majors and as people who, for some reason or other, forgot we are not alone, and that there is a world waiting to reveal itself to whoever is patient and willing. Science makes a discipline out of our approach to this world.

I think that the best moments I've had in the Ateneo were the ones which I've shared with the people I've met during my stay. To my professors, thank you for the wisdom you've given me since day one. To my friends, I'm really thankful for each and every one of you, and I love you all so much. To my blockmates, Physics wasn't easy, but it surely was a lot of fun with you guys around. Lastly, to the Ateneo, thank you for being my second home and for giving me the most meaningful years of my life.

Tarjata Anjelika R. Conde

MINOR IN APPLIED PHYSICS

I often found myself pulling away from a desk full of homework to take a walk around the campus. It was nothing short of comfort to look up at the stars for some peace of mind, for a reminder of why I chose to be a physicist, and less practically, for answers to Chapter 12 of Griffiths. Yet, it was this same place that taught me how to gladly surrender a sky-bound stupor in service of making every step of the way count, while discovering what it truly means to mean a lot to people.

Jandy Diaz B.

More than 10,929 hours have passed since day one. Tonight, as I finish this write-up along with other requirements I needed to submit, I try to remember all the significant details in my college life: the ups and downs, the people, the lessons I learned, among others. Condensing all of these is a tough task, yet I'd still do it. Undesirable things happened, but thanks to you (the sound I hear from a copper wind chime as I gaze at the azure sky), I did not lose hope. [10 Dec 2017, 2130 UTC+8]

"I'll be there someday; I can go the distance. I will find my way if I can be strong. I know every mile will be worth my while. When I go the distance, I'll be right where I belong." (Alan Menken and David Zippel, Hercules)

Ralph Lorenzo T. Locsin

I entered Ateneo oblivious and naive that I allowed myself to be vulnerable to negativity. All the problems I faced took its toll and I found myself constantly asking Him, "why?" Ateneo taught me to keep my head up at all times, that is to say, to always be grateful despite the adversities, and see failure as an opportunity to become better. Now I am facing a new chapter of my life scarred and stained, but better equipped with wisdom that will guide me in finding the right path towards success.

Aliena Mari P. Miranda

We ask ourselves, "who am I?" The answers are people, events, ideas. In public, we celebrate what dazzles, apparently undivided. In private, we bury what frightens, what fragments. Loss, the deepest wounding always felt as loss of self, cuts us off with pregnant pause and the threat of ruin. Death answers in full stop punctuation. But it's the answers that do us in. Ask, and we are undone anew. We ask, who? Life asks, why? The answer: the [quest] ion. To you I ask, why? And to us, why not?

Kim Nicole V. Peña

The most important thing I learned in college was that it wasn't really about doing more things. Instead, it was doing more for all the right things. Here's to all those things—the ones I've been with to the very end, and the ones I had to learn to give up.
This one's for you.

Hi, future self. Just so you know, we've only gotten this far because of one reason, only one. You know what it is. Cherish the time and all who are still with you. Even when life doesn't go the way we want, just remember to keep moving forward! Wherever you are, I want you to keep praising our Lord. Listen to wisdom. YOU are not your own. May you be more humble, unselfish and full of joy. Respect all. Remember important dates. Keep praying Mt 17:20. Enjoy life, alright? God bless!

Loyalty is trust. It's earned through observation of each other and shared experience together. It is in the integrity of consistent action. When you have that bond, then you don't ask for loyalty—it's a given. It's expected. You don't have to ask them for it and you don't have to tell them they have yours. They already know it, and so should you.

A minute on this entry was 36, 000 km/s through space! Five years in the Ateneo marks the end of a 100+ billion km journey through our infinitely expanding universe!

It cannot be denied that five years of college is like having your playlist on shuffle mode, you never know what's in store for you but it will always have a way of surprising you. To the people who have guided me to become the person I am today, to those who I've journeyed with in juggling academic requirements, and to the Ateneo for giving me endless opportunities to be a man for and with others—thank you. At the end of it all, it was the unpredictability of things that made it worthwhile.

Andre, French for brave, is apt for the man known for his well-kept mane. After high school, he committed to growing his hair out—a feat comparable to how he flourished throughout his journey. He often fought to stay true to himself, but it was all worth it. After joining and falling in love with the ACLC community, he began to further embody the values of acceptance, humility, and bravery, pushing him to become a more loving person each day through constant prayer and discernment.

A girl with a swagger who's into scalpel and blood. The only one I know who isn't afraid of sweeping floors beside dead people. She's #goals herself as she managed to go through five years of heaven and hell and achieved more than just academics. A tough girl who's not afraid to stand for what she believes in backed with philosophy. Regie's bound to be the most hilarious doctor ever. Mitch has always been a strong and independent woman. She makes sure to enjoy the little things in life—the sublime yet often overlooked. She is a joy to people who had the opportunity to know her beyond the fresh face and stylish taste. But beneath all these is a genuine person who stays committed to her friends and family. She might look difficult to please, but it doesn't take much to put a smile on her face. Mitch makes it easy for everyone around her to see the beauty in everything.

Abigail G. Reyes

There is no doubt that my stay here was no piece of cake. But if it was, it was a chocolate ice cream cake with red hot chili peppers secretly stuffed inside. I got the best of both worlds but again, it's a constant simultaneous feeling especially near those excruciating deadlines. At times, coffee washes it down leaving just a slight tinge of sweetness and pain. To my family and friends, thank you for being that hot cup of bittersweet latte to which I found comfort in during those times.

Sometimes it takes you years to find something that's just right under your nose. I always thought that Ateneo was just another school that I need to get by; I was meant for something greater. But after a few years of staying here, I realized that the greatness that I yearned was already walking with me in the same pavement. Ateneo taught me another way to look at people for what they are: a way that goes beyond my reasoning and intuition. I'll keep this lesson to heart as I go down the hill.

Sa lahat ng taong nagpapkila at tuluyang nagpapakilala sa akin sa mundo, maraming salamat. Tinuruan ninyo akong magbadya at makiisa sa mga lugar at mga pagkakataong madaling maisantabi kung hindi tayo nagtagpo. Wari'y natuklasan ko na hindi natatapos ang paghubog sa sarili kaalinsabay ng paghihirap, pagsisikap at pakikipagkapwa. Dahil sa inyo'y natuto akong magbigay at mag-isip na higit pa sa kinakailangan para sa sarili at para sa iba. Muli, maraming salamat.

Salamat Ateneo. Ikaw ang nagmulat sa puso at isip ko upang lalong lumalim ang pagkakilala ko sa aking sarili. Hindi matatawaran ang aking mga natutunan. Dito nahubog ang aking pagkatao, ang dating tahimik at mahiyain ay tinulungan mong umusbong ang tapang at tiwala sa sarili, sa kapwa at lalong lalo na sa Diyos. Dito natuklasan ko ang kahalagahan kung bakit patuloy na nagmamahal, nagpapatawed, nagtitiwala at nagtataya ang tao sumisingag man o hindi ang liwanag.

Sounds a lot like “phew”, right?
It’s the sound we make when we arrive on time from the BEL-CTC rush, when we clutch submit a midnight paper at 11:59PM, when we miraculously pass that terror prof’s oral exam, and when we realize it’s all over and we finally made it.
Here, I could become anything, but I couldn’t do everything. And that’s really okay. Time moves, and while the close calls keep coming, all I can feel is just... gratitude, you know? Thank you everyone, for everything!

To be able to design a fully functional technical product. To have the spirit to lead fellow student leaders through events either successful or heartbreakng. To know how to cope with unprecedeted levels of stress. More than any of these gifts I've received in Ateneo, there is one thing I hold above all—an awareness of my direction in life. My ORSEM theme was Lipad. We flew up the hill, to a vantage point that gave us a view of our surroundings and the people around us. We learned, empathized and grew from all that we saw. Sadly, my flight up the hill was filled with delays and turbulence. As my friends flew off the hill and into the mountains, I patched up my wings and refueled. During the grounded time, I finally found myself both in the industry and in who I want to be. Two years late but here I am, found and finally taking off.

Two eggs. One is trained and the other is created. Both have life but only trained egg can learn. The created egg is only made to be cooked for a meal. If it survives, it rolls away and the trained egg goes around cooking another egg. Throwing an egg at another yields a minimum of two cracks. The inner floor eats the egg's age at a tenth of a day. The middle floor swallows the yoke and the force while splitting the shell. Finally, the outer floor splits the half of the spaces in between.

After four of the most transformative years of my life, I'm finally ready to leave the nest. Thank you Ateneo for helping me take flight.

Nais kong magtapos sa simula. Nais kong balikan ang mga larawan ng mga natagpuan kong samahan at kapatiran sa paglalakbay na ito. Muli kong mamasdan ang mga naipon kong tanda ng tagumpay. Uuwi ako dala ang sariling binago ng mga lubak at harang sa daan. Magtatapos ako sa simula, sa tahanang natutunan kong mahalin, at babaunin ko ang lahat ng ito para sa mas malawak na paglalakbay na naghihintay. Salamat sa paglalakbay, Ateneo! Wala akong pinagsisihan sa pagpiling tumahak sa landas na ito.

Here's to another chapter in my life: to the many ups and downs, to the hardships and trials, to the opportunities to grow and develop character. There were times that truly tested my grit and determination, and instances that forced me to keep fighting and not give up. In the process, I learned to be more outgoing and more courageous, to trust in others, and most importantly to believe in my own abilities. Thank you, Ateneo, for helping me grow in strength and character in each passing day.

One cannot help but feel perplexed in the face of absolute uncertainty. Nonetheless, we are all called to search—to search intensely, and to revel endlessly even more in doubt. What is life if left unquestioned? Ateneo allowed me to find solace and comfort in the unknown. Although the search never ends, “the struggle itself is enough to fill one’s heart. One must imagine Sisyphus happy.” (Albert Camus)

I've learned that, across the many stories I've had the privilege of telling, one thing is for certain—the path to happiness starts from the depths of despair. I entered the Ateneo lost & searching. Four years later, I still can't say that I've been found but through all the hardship & sorrow, I can say this, "be prepared to lose much, but be ready to love even more. Be ready to help others, but never neglect to help yourself. And lastly, be willing to risk it all—if only just to find yourself."

We all began college full of hopes and dreams—a freshie characteristic. You can guess someone's a freshie when their eyes is still brimming with hope. I wish I could say that I kept that hope until my senior year. Gabriel Marcel said hope isn't calculated, and that's what happened during these four years. Rather than losing hope, I got reassured of what's to come. It's less of hoping for a better future, and more of believing you'll forge a better one with everyone you meet.

Sa unang taon ko sa Ateneo, natuklasan ko ang isang bagay na nakapagpabagabag ng aking katauhan—malaki ang pagkukulang ko. At sa apat na taong paglalayag ko, sa pagmulat ko sa iba't ibang katotohanan, tila mas lumawak ang naturang pagkukulang sa sarili. Hindi ko masasabi na isang masamang bagay iyong, bagkus ito pa'y aking yayakapin. Sa pag-amin sa katotohanang ito, lalo pa akong magiging bukas sa kahit ano pa mang ikauunlad ng sarili ko. Maraming salamat, Ateneo!

Ateneo broke me. It showed me how cruel and unfair the world is. It showed me the systems that propagate injustice in the world. It showed me how insignificant we are in the greater scheme of things. What 5 years in Ateneo has taught me—college is, and then it isn't. It is the good days, the bad days, the tests you didn't study for, the professors that move you, the friends who become your family, the clutch moments that worked out and that didn't. These moments happened, then they passed. And when all is said and done, you will come to realize, you should have started your thesis earlier. Peace and love, home slices.

No matter how ambiguously difficult it was to fight for the things greater than myself, I realized that I cannot give up on something that inspired me to live and love. The tremendous, riveting pain was there to fasten my attention on something that I never even dreamed to be my calling. Now what did I get from all my struggles and stress? Profound joy and fulfillment—because I found my niche amidst the grander scheme of things.

Thank you, Ateneo, for expanding my universe of meaning.

M is for Magis.

I never liked challenges. For the longest time, the things I wanted required minimal effort from me. Entering the Ateneo, however, challenged me. Suddenly, things weren't easy to get, and you have to work hard for something you want to achieve. You have to give more, to be more. Ateneo broke me in many ways, and I was pushed beyond my limit, but this didn't stop me. From failed quizzes to failed friendships, I learned how to bounce back and embrace challenges that help me be better everyday.

Ysabelle Bianca M. Andan

Christian Patrick L. Antonio

Ateneo will always have a special place in my heart. It is where I learned my ABCs, up to my DNAs. It is where I encountered the most amazing, and life-changing people. Where I found my heart's desires. I am thankful for being placed in the crucible, and being forged into the man I am today. For all the joys and tears, to the fears and beers, thank you. On to the next challenge! OBF and AMDG.

Don't let that scare you.

(O. Spencer)

Andre Joshua S. Bantilan

The allure of succumbing to doubt lies in our need for self-preservation—to avoid or mitigate the possibility of sadness, disappointment, and ultimately, pain. However, bend too much to it and we trap ourselves in a box with no room to grow. Do not reflexively surrender to doubt, but confront it, understand it and learn from it. No one should ever wish for pain but understand that when pain marks us, we have the choice to let it rot and lose ourselves or let it heal and be better.

As a person who never runs out of things to say, these four years have been filled with moments that have truly left me at a loss for words. Here's to Kythe-Ateneo, who has taught me to celebrate life despite anything and everything; to the Health Sciences community, who has never failed to overwhelm me with their constant support; to my family, who has given me more love than I could have ever deserved; and to the Big Guy up there who has made all of this possible, thank You. This is for You.

In the 15 years that I've been studying in Ateneo, I can say that this school has truly become my home. I've met friends who I'll cherish for the rest of my life, and brilliant professors who were truly inspiring and pushed me to explore and become a social catalyst in the world. Most of all, I'd like to thank Google and Wikipedia for always being there for me. It'll be hard to leave this place I call home but I know that I made the most of it here. So I'm not sad it's over, I'm glad it happened.

Don't let the beautiful campus deceive you. Like a mountain, Ateneo has its muddy trails, narrow ridges, and impossible assaults. Sometimes, you just want to stop completely or maybe, just jump off the nearest cliff. Hopefully, you'd end up in a better place. But, there is no better place. Once you're on a summit, it's beautiful. Yet there is something more beautiful: the friendships you've made, and the better person you've become on that mountain. Injured, tired, and gross, but content.

Hannah P. Burca

From overseas sands to tropical fields of green, I have learned to conquer the fear of leaving home for my dreams. From being the best of the class to being a mediocre among a sea of scholars, I have gained as much humility as lessons. From playing safe to taking risks, I have achieved the courage to take on what it means to be a woman for others. Here's to taking a leap of faith with the blue and white, and to discovering the essence of MAGIS. Thank you, Ateneo. On to greater heights!

Luis Anton A. Cabrera

The world needs a man that it can depend on when all hell breaks loose. For most Ateneans, that man is this guy. This guy will be there through thick and thin, and the lows and highs. This man is constantly breaking the boundaries of what it is to be a student. All-nighters are a usual thing for this man, since he is ready to help and ready to burn the midnight oil to get results. Think the perfect Atenean doesn't exist? Meet Anton Cabrera. A man with no vice and all the right virtues. (B. Dascil)

If there's one thing that you take from your stay in Ateneo, it's to learn to listen through your fears & not to them. Never let the anxiety trap you in your internal world. Instead, work what you've learned to make the leaps you take easier. Celebrate the days that brought you defeat as well as the triumphant moments because these have lead to the person you are today. When the skies and the grounds were one, the legends, through their twelve forces, nurtured the tree of life. An eye of red force created the evil which coveted the heart of tree of life, and the heart slowly grew dry. To tend and embrace the heart of tree of life, the legends hereby divide the tree in half and hide each side. Hence, time is over-turned and space turns askew. The twelve forces divide into two and create two suns that look alike into two worlds that seem alike. (EXO, MAMA)

Ako'y nagpapasalamat sa lahat ng aking mga natuklasan sa loob at labas ng silid-aralan. Natuto akong makita kung ano pa ang kaya kong gawin at tanggapin ang mga kahinaan ko. Ngunit, alam kong hindi ko ito mararating kung wala ang mga taong nakasalamuha at nakasama ko sa paglalakbay, at pagtuklas sa mga hindi inaasahan. Kaya, salamat. I never wanted to become an Atenean. I thought Ateneans were a bunch of snobs that probinsyanos like me can never keep up with. But one day, my mom decided that I take the entrance exam, and somehow, I made it in. My stay in the Ateneo was difficult. But having my blockmates and course mates around me, I was able to make it my home. As we enter the next phase of our lives, may we be guided by our Ateneo education, and be the light that our country sorely needs.

Four years, eleven semesters, countless highs and lows of university life, and tons of precious moments that will stay in my heart for as long as I live. Needless to say, it has been such a wild ride. I'm so thankful to all the people I've met: my blockmates, my roommates, profs, fellow ARSAns, BioLfSci people, and of course, my family. It's been unreal. Thank you, Ateneo, for making me a stronger person. AMDG!

More than the prestige and privilege, I believe being an Atenean is a mission—to truly love, know, and respect yourself and others; to listen to the call of the Other; to discover what you want to spend your whole life fighting for, the one that makes every day worth living for. It may sound too much but wherever you are in life right now, don't give up just yet. You are already doing well. Just continue, you'll get there.

The next three hours I spend offering my body and soul to the Church of Iron. Afterwards, I walk to Sec-B foyer, where everyone makes fun of my legs. Yes, they truly are ding-dongs, but they're MY ding-dongs. I end the day measuring all my fungi babies with my fellow thesis slave, Mr. Aw Young. I drive home. Eat. And by 9, I'm in bed. No regrets.

Set out with Layag, finally here at Tagpo—or am I? Fifth year by choice, never shifted (though tempted at least a hundred times), double minor, more extra subjects, and BS Org on the side. I kind of don't want to leave yet—probably the epitome of “if college is the best 4 years of your life, why not make it 5 or 6?” But also, I kind of just want to leave already to become a real jack-of-all-trades, master-of-some who gets paid. I'll set sail once again, so see you in our next meeting point!

I crammed this write-up. Doing it never feels right, yet in those few moments of forced genius, you might squeeze something worthwhile. There are things that I regret doing in Ateneo; the moping alone, the fear of going out there in my first few years. Yet as I arrive closer to my slow walk towards the graduation stage, I look back and see my area kids' smiles, my friends' unwavering support, and Ateneo telling me to do more and that I can be more. In the end, I'd give my whole experience an A.

Entering college, I was a naïve, unprepared teenager. A choice had to be made—either change or leave. Ateneo helped me overcome things I never knew I was capable of by challenging me to the best of my limits. Hardened by the hardships, I have come into terms with the realities of life. We must persevere through the tiredness to achieve genuine change. At the same time, keep noticing how sweet the world can be.
Thank you Ateneo, for being this instrument of change. We are your finished project.

A wise man once said: "Life is a big joke. Don't take it seriously." In my 4 years in the Ateneo, I've realized that to be truly happy, we just have to trust the process. God has perfect timing, and this we must keep in mind. In times of hardship, we should not complain nor wallow in self-pity. Rather, we must go with the flow, enjoy the waves, be calm and patient, faithful and hopeful, that no matter what happens, a new dawn is upon us and things will fall into place eventually.

A heart of gold, hands that are always willing to help, a spirit of adventure and fun... these descriptions may still not suffice to define the kind of person he is. Jacob, a very free-spirited individual, sees the good in others and genuinely wants to help other people grow. Knowing him made me realize what selflessness and true love is.

As I end my journey through this place filled with memories that I'll always cherish, I want to recognize the people that have made me who I am today. To God, my family, friends, classmates, teachers, and org mates, you are the lights that guide me throughout the journey that is life. However small or large a part you've played, I appreciate every one of you and the impact you've had on me.
Everything that I am today is because of you, and for that I thank you from the bottom of my heart.

To all the risky naps I've taken, witty side comments or eye rolls I've made, and all the late night conversations, awkward encounters, fast food binges, coffee runs, and insane character development I've had in the last four years. College felt like being stuck in a TV sitcom I had no escape from, nor did I ever earn from, but will always be glad to have been a part of.

The journey from the very first step into the Ateneo until the one that lands me onto its graduation stage has been a long and magnificent one. It has no shortage of uncharted twists and turns, and its many eddies have kept me circling. Unfazed, I took a path that was my own, and in that path, I discovered that I am endlessly, profoundly indebted to my friends, family, and professors. Without them, I would not be here today. This triumph of mine is not mine alone, but ours. Thank you!

For the long days I've spent in this university — 1460 to be exact, for every valuable lesson learned, for the great people I've met and have cherished as friends, for the countless stresses and pressures I felt in fear of not meeting a deadline, all these experiences have brought out the best in me and have made me a better version of myself. I am eternally grateful to you Ateneo, for opening me to endless possibilities and opportunities. You will always have a special place in my heart.

I sometimes got lost in the frenzy that is the Ateneo. From meeting my block for the first time, riding along with the commotion of org DP blasts, experiencing the 10-minute brutality of orals, finding the gaze of the absolute Other, and to all the lunch sessions and late-night chats, I could never have imagined that this is the college experience the Ateneo way. Thank you, Ateneo, for the opportunity to immerse and be part of such an amazing experience.

"This was a triumph
I'm making a note here: "Huge Success"
It's hard to overstate my satisfaction" (Portal, Still Alive)

It is a cycle of great expectations and goal-setting at the start of the semester, to going downhill to the point of checking your grades just to see if I passed a subject. When it is hell week, my mantra would always be, "I have been here before. If I can do it before, I can do it now." In my three-year absence, I learned that we have much more to learn apart from secular knowledge, and I must acquaint myself with the "real world" in order to be the person Ateneo wants me to be.

To exist in this world is to give meaning and purpose. We are called to love ourselves, but even more so, to commit to loving the other. The world is a treacherous place, but there is always space for love, justice, and hope.
